WATER

Water, the basic amenity of life, is finite and precious. Serving pure and potable water to the dense populations in developing countries, especially in India, has been a holistic yet a daunting task. The fundamental objective of an urban water service is to supply adequate and safe wholesome water, efficiently and effectively at an affordable price to all the citizens.

Continuous mode water supply certainly has distinct advantages and we always dream and aim for it. However intermittent water supply is reality. There are numerous reasons and hurdles to operate initially planned continuous mode water supply system and eventually we are compelled to operate the same in intermittent water supply.

Transforming the disorderly distribution system into the well disciplined and properly designed adequate pressurized system is the objective of continuous mode water supply. Nevertheless, developing and planning complementing alternative plans to face reality can be a rational approach. An overall planning keeping both the aspects in vision should be most appropriate. Design and operations planned with such a viewpoint shall be optimal yet delivering the best possible results for the prevailing circumstances.

The Indian Water Works Association (IWWA) which having 36 centres across India with head quarter in Mumbai and association with many international organizations has always put efforts for knowledge dissemination and spread to the most grass root level through various activities including organizing workshops, seminars and conferences.

IWWA, Mumbai Centre is now organizing two days national seminar on this for deliberating on this subject with a basic aim to bring all the eminent authorities, experts, consulting organizations, infrastructure operators on a platform to share their experience to harness better solutions.

The Themes for the seminar are as follows -

1. Experience of Continuous Mode (24x7) water supply projects.
2. Drivers of Intermittent Mode water supply systems.
3. Alternative approaches for water supply management.
4. NRW Management, economic aspects of NRW considering repair, replacement and source augmentation.
5. Asset management of Water Supply system
6. Effective metering, billing and recovery mechanism
7. GIS applications for design, implementation, operations and overall management
8. Design principles - Water Supply Systems : need to adopt flexibility.
9. Operations of continuous mode and intermittent mode water supply system.
